STORIES OF INTERIORIZATION

UNHCR and Aldeias Infantis in Rio de Janeiro have been working since 2018 receiving refugees and migrants from Venezuela in the Institutional modality of Interiorization. In December, eight women sheltered in Aldeias Infantis graduated from Tecendo Sonhos Project, an initiative of Instituto Aliança with SENAC (National Business Learning Service), where they participated in courses of tailoring-and-sewing and socioemotional skills. The refugee women reported that the course is the first step towards realizing their dreams, which has as its main goal to provide a dignified life for their family. Ana Guzman was one of the women relocated by the Institutional modality and that participated in this initiative in 2020. She was sheltered for 3 months with her family at Aldeias Infantis and left the reception and integration center trained and employed by the project.

"It was a very beautiful and interesting experience. I did not know anything about sewing and with the course I learned a lot of things. And thanks to this course I'm working and living in Rio de Janeiro for one year now with my family"

Content Research and Production on Interiorization

Research on interiorized Venezuelan people:

On 8 December, the survey entitled "Limits and challenges to the local integration of refugee and migrant women and men from Venezuela interiorized during the COVID-19 pandemic" was launched, idealized by UNHCR in partnership with UN Women and UNFPA and carried out by Federal University of Minas Gerais (UFMG), showing that Venezuelan refugees and migrants who are beneficiaries of the interiorization strategy have greater access to income and education, compared to the population that remains sheltered in the sState of Roraima. At the same time, it has been shown that issues of gender, race, and ethnicity structure the inequalities experienced in the interiorization process, as interiorized women have a higher unemployment rate than men and a lower average income, particularly black women. In addition, the research reveals that there is a great potential for expanding the strategy of interiorization among the population sheltered in Roraima furthermore highlighting the relevance of the role of receiving states in the process.
