“Life is a blind lottery. You cannot choose the circumstances of your birth: your gender, your ethnicity, your parents’ wealth, or your disability. Yet technology has the immense potential to even the playing field. Technology can transform the way children learn, connect and discover opportunities for their wellbeing and development. In a world of growing inequalities and uncertainties, technology can be a source of empowerment, enabling children to become the authors of their futures and to rise above the cycle of disadvantage.”

Acknowledgments

This project was a joint effort between RErights.org – an initiative of the Institute for Culture and Society at Western Sydney University, Digitally Connected and UNICEF’s Voices of Youth – and UNICEF’s The State of the World’s Children team. The project team is grateful to Paloma Escudero, Deborah Sweeney and Paul James for their initial encouragement to undertake this project, and to the Division of Communication, UNICEF New York for generously funding it.

Our heartfelt thanks go to the 490 children and young people, from 26 countries, who generously gave of their time to share their insights about how digital media are shaping their lives.

We originally planned to run a total of ten workshops in ten countries but were overwhelmed by a groundswell of support for this project. In the end, 36 workshops were delivered by 26 UNICEF Country Offices and National Committees. The project team is greatly indebted to the following individuals for their enthusiasm, commitment and professionalism in recruiting children and young people and delivering the workshops.

UNICEF

UNICEF works in some of the world’s toughest places, to reach the World’s most disadvantaged children. To save their lives. To defend their rights. To help them fulfil their potential. Across 190 countries and territories, we work for every child, everywhere, every day, to build a better world for everyone. And we never give up.

RErights

RErights.org is a youth-centred participatory consultation platform that enables children aged 10–19 to share their insights and experiences regarding the digital age. The platform was developed by the Institute for Culture and Society at Western Sydney University, in partnership with the Young and Well Cooperative Research Centre, Digitally Connected, and UNICEF’s Voices of Youth.

“It is in the very nature of the human condition that each new generation grows into an old world.... [We must] decide whether we love our children enough not to expel them from our world and leave them to their own devices, nor to strike from their hands their chance of undertaking something new, something unforeseen by us, but to
