I wish to thank Jan Connolly for her contribution to the paper. Jan's long experience as a Chief Executive Officer of a large government agency with a strong social justice focus was important in developing my understanding of performance oriented budgeting and the disjuncture between the theory and practice. Our conversations formed the basis for developing the framework of making output and outcomes budgeting a tool for gender responsive budgets. Other valuable contributions were made by Debbie Budlender, Ray Broomhill and Diane Elson who commented on the first draft of this paper. I have also benefited from the research assistance of Donna Shotton, Sanjuta Vas Dev, Valerie Adams and Lou Wilson. I have valued the graphic design and editorial assistance of Barbara Brougham.

My thanks to UNIFEM for funding this research, Elizabeth Villagomez at UNIFEM for getting me interested in the issue and Nisreen Alami for her assistance in seeing the project through to completion.
