FOREWORD

A new era in global health and development began in 2016. The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development came into force, after its adoption by world leaders in 2015. This new holistic vision of global development calls on countries to achieve 17 interconnected and interdependent Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and leave no one behind.

The SDGs build on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), but they go much further. While the Western Pacific Region made remarkable progress under the MDGs, gains did not benefit all groups equitably.

The SDGs reflect a new understanding that today's health and development challenges are increasingly complex, integrated and interlinked. They require more integrated and inclusive strategies to achieve economic, environmental, political and social development that leaves no one behind.

The SDGs place more demands on Member States and WHO. Member States may build on information systems, policies, reporting and coordination arrangements. At the same time, however, they must go beyond business as usual to develop new ways of working that address the underlying determinants of quality of life. They must work across all sectors and stakeholders to achieve the vision of sustainable development for everyone.

At the sixty-seventh session of the WHO Regional Committee for the Western Pacific in October 2016, Member States endorsed the Regional Action Agenda on Achieving the Sustainable Development Goals in the Western Pacific. We stand ready to support Member States – at all levels of development – in their efforts to achieve the many health-related targets of the SDGs.

Working together, we can make the vision of sustainable development a reality for all of the nearly 1.9 billion people who call the Western Pacific Region home.
